Whither the Irish Economy?

Pattern of downward revisions for 2012

Unusual uncertainty

Initial output gap

Speed the output gap will close

Underlying trend growth rate of potential output

Recognising the Uncertainty

- Need for greater recognition of uncertainty in medium-term budgetary documents
  - Error bands around forecasts
  - Use of fan charts (showing how uncertainty increases with the forecast horizon)
  - Importance of sensitivity/scenario analysis
  - More discussion of downside risks

Assessment of Fiscal Stance

Basic framework

- Trade off
  - Supporting domestic demand versus debt sustainability/creditworthiness
- Key considerations
  - Funding vulnerabilities
  - Fragility of debt sustainability
  - Longer-term implications of high debt
  - Weak demand conditions

October Assessment

 Medium-term General Government deficit targets within range of appropriate policies

- IFAC case for more ambitious consolidation
  - To reach 1 percent by 2015

Rationales for Revised Assessment

- Government's medium-term fiscal stance still within the range of appropriate policies
- Case for more ambitious adjustment remains strong
- But reaching 1 percent by 2015 now looks overly ambitious
  - Weaker growth
  - Creditworthiness less fragile
  - Smaller actual adjustment for 2012
- Case for retaining IFAC consolidation targets for 2013-2015
  - €2.8 Billion in additional adjustments relative to Budget 2012

Retaining flexibility while retaining credibility

Uncertainty → Inevitability of growth surprises

- Value of more growth-contingent fiscal plans
  - Targets for cyclically adjusted deficit
  - Targets for discretionary adjustments

Importance of the nature of the growth shock

Summing up

- Weakening of growth prospects
  - Significant uncertainty
- Meeting 8.6 percent target for 2012 will be challenging
- Dilemma in choosing fiscal stance
  - Retain more ambitious targets for discretionary adjustments for 2013-2015
  - But some accommodation in actual deficit to GDP ratio (subject to programme constraints)
- Advantages of retaining flexibility while preserving credibility
